

Thought for the Day

By Robert Smith
October 30, 2010

City folk and suburbanites alike all live in their own little social "bubbles" where their interactive lives assume similar patterns of behavior based on the artificial values and morals inflicted upon them by all forms of media. As such, violent events such as terrorist attacks, hurricanes, earthquakes, etc., just become another form of entertainment - a sort of "reality show" provided for their amusement. Until something significant is abruptly taken from them they will assume that they are all safe (not free) and sound (provided for by the government).

Socialism in America is nothing more than a carrot on a string, luring a complacent society under the big Marxist box. The stick holding up the box will be pulled out in a generation or so.